

Thinking of You
By Eric Nicholson

Sometimes I wonder to myself, why does love hurt so much—feeling the pain—while missing your touch...

They say love knows no bounds—and I believe that to be true—feeling the love I have for you...

In all the times I held you close—seeing the spark in your eyes—the light of your smile—and warm embrace I seem to miss so much—I wish that we—could always be—in love and always keeping our feelings free—living our dreams and sacrificing to give—a chance at the life we hope to live...

In faith, with strength and trust—these are my thoughts while missing you much...

My love is sent from me to you—if you are smiling it's because—at that moment—I'm thinking of you and smiling too...

I guess being apart can bring on the strain—we have to know the sun will shine—even after the rain—I know it's worth it—loving you is worth more than the pain—with you in my life—I have everything to gain...

I love you—that will always be true—and knowing you love me too—makes the pain go away—while thinking of you.